

cheer lustily. They called out their bands and played several spirited tunes, and raised and dipped their flags. When each one of these war-ships had been visited, we started on our trip in earnest to visit every variety of craft

A movement among the liberal Germans of this city has been in progress for the last three months, which has finally resulted in a political organization, some account of which will be found in another column. Their statement of principles is very clear and unequivocal and such as will, without doubt, command the enthusiastic support of all loyal Germans. The Club in which this organization originated recently passed a series of resolutions, in one of which they pledge a hearty and undivided support to the candidates nominated by the Union party, though declaring at the same time that the resolutions adopted at Syracuse are wanting in such declarations of principle as they think the present condition of the country demands. Their purpose is, they declare, to infuse into the National party an "earnest and unwavering spirit of freedom and the universal acceptance of the principles of justice and equity."

—The Democratic managers in Pennsylvania are more thoroughly in sympathy with the Rebels than those of almost any other State. We are not aware that any one of them has evinced any hearty sympathy with our National struggle for existence. At Cincinnati, in 1856, a summe of them, in order to secure Southern support for Buchanan, pledged their State to go with the South in case of any disruption and collision between the two sections. In 1861, is simply beyond her means. War three thousand miles from the base of operations is not in the power of any nation or any combination of nations against such a military power as that of the United States. Certainly, since railroads and steam have added so ineffectually to the means of resistance and the facilities for the concentration of troops, a force landing anywhere on the coast of the United States would be overwhelmed before it could make a lodgment; and no men-of-war, not the combined navies of France and England, could safely convey a hostile force to the Southern ports. Avoiding conflict with the armed vessels, our cruisers would follow and pick off the straggling fleets of unarmed transports which are the inevitable accompaniments of such expeditions. We remember with what trembling anxiety we have awaited the arrival of the numerous expeditions

We give fair notice in advance to all whom it may concern, that nominations made in the interest of corruption and public plunder will not have the support of the independent masses of

We only regret to see a body of men who cut themselves loose from party trammels and avow their determination to suppress rebellion at any price reiterating an expression of the unjust and unwise prejudice against the immigration of negroes into the State. How-
